Welcome to the Milwaukee VA Fisher House
A family’s love is good medicine

A family’s experience and children’s donation make this place home

BY GARY KUNICH

The beds are made. The photos are on the walls. The books are on the shelves.

Everything is in place for this “home away from home” to start accepting its first guests.

But long before the April 23 ribbon cutting, the idea of a Fisher House to offer free housing to Veteran families was just a dream and millions of dollars away from reality.

The idea for this free housing first came from Zachary Fisher back in early 1990, and since then it served more than 250,000 families and saved them $282 million in lodging and travel costs. Fisher Houses — all 70 of them (68 in the United States, one in Minneapolis VA Medical Center, and one in Puerto Rico) — have served more than 250,000 families and have saved millions of dollars away from reality.

Germany and another in Great Britain) – are built strictly from donations, with many of those millions coming directly from the Fisher Family Foundation itself. While the foundation kicks in piles of cash, they do ask groups first hit certain financial milestones to see if it is feasible.

People in Milwaukee wanted to see one happen right here on the VA campus. Then the people of Wisconsin did something unheard of.

“People were looking for something they could do. They had the money, they had the will, they had the heart. They wanted to see something happen here,” Potthast, who oversees marketing and donations. “From the boys giving up their birthday money to the private family donations, all the way to large foundations willing to give, every single one was important.”

“The family grew up in the Fisher House there. His son, David, was driving home from Fort Carson, Colorado, with his family for a Christmas visit in 2007. He was due to deploy a couple months later.

“It was icy roads and a truck coming the other way jackknifed and slammed right into them,” Potthast said. “They deployed a couple months later.”

“Thank you for the house to come back,” Michael Halula said, “and meet and talk to other families going through the same thing.”

Families, welcome to Fisher House

BY YANTIT IZIRARRY

You and your family have journeyed to see a loved one in the hospital. You’re worried about whether or not they will be alright, and everyone is mentally and physically exhausted. You think to yourself, “At least VA gave me a place to stay the night. There is no way we could afford this trip on our own.”

Taking care of this need and recognizing that a ‘family’s love is a good medicine’ demonstrates the Fisher House mission. Now Milwaukee has a way to provide for these in a gorgeous setting right on the Zablocki campus.

At 13,000 square feet, the Milwaukee VA Fisher House is full of luxury behind every door. The two-story Carolina Rose brick, features robust white pillars in front of the entryway and white shutters encasing each window. The flag pole stands tall, waving the Fisher House flag.

As you enter the foyer through double French doors, a sense of calmness flows over you as you stand on 18-inch porcelain tiles and walls covered in a luxurious gold bamboo texture. Leading through two entryways, rising tall like sentries, are two white contemporary, floor-to-ceiling columns, seeming to serve as gatekeepers to the house. Scattered throughout the house are black and white, handpicked photos depicting Wisconsin residents and agriculture, as well as calming earth-tone canvas paintings.

At the end of the foyer stands a bronze bust of the Fisher House founders, Zachary and Elizabeth Fisher, greeting all those who enter with a smile.

Throughout the foyer, you view a library, speckled with tabletop pottery and a lux décor lounge area wrapped in modern Belgian-designed wallpaper. On the white bookcase, nestled under a single flower green vase, lie treasures in frilly metallic inks and canvas designed wallpaper. At the end of the foyer stands a bronze bust of the Fisher House founders, Zachary and Elizabeth Fisher, greeting all those who enter with a smile.

Plush seating in a mix of complementary prints rest staunchly above an oversize rug. It seems to say, “Take a seat and rest your eyes, mind and heart.” In the room’s center lies a brass-trimmed glass coffee table, surrounded on either side by two high-back chairs accented in a bird motif. Matching window draperies pull the room together.

Across the room, through the foyer’s double pillars, sits a dining room, complete with five sets of 55-inch black granite circular tables. Each table is surrounded by plush blue green textured high back cloth dining room chairs, crowned with a golden pillar candle chandelier. On the wall, a large print shows Zachary and Elizabeth Fisher smiling at their environment. The center dining table is paired with five wooden chairs decorated by a wooden box with brass detail, filled with an array of multicolored floral arrangements. The back wall features a grey wooden buffet table, where a black metal holder displays a large Fisher House book with the slogan, “Because family’s love is a good medicine.”

The black granite continues into the kitchen, complemented by a 3-inch tall earth tone backsplash. Pairs of black and silver appliances are contrasted by brilliant white cabinets, and Eclipse Ocean textured wallpaper. What seem to be tall white cabinets along the wall are actually four refrigerators. In the center of the room a massive 3-by-10-foot solid slab black granite island makes a statement of grandeur.

This layout centers on two black dishwashers sandwiched between two stainless steel free-standing sinks surrounded by vast counter space, which provides an everyday platform for espresso machines, coffee makers, mixers and slow cookers. On either side is a black microwave doubling as a range hood above an electric stovetop. Matching double ovens are on opposing sides of the kitchen, with a breakfast bar leading into the living room.

In the living room, posh seating faces a large 55-inch flat screen television. Through it, a porch seated comfortably below a white pergola, provides an optimal view overlooking Milwaukee VA hospital.

At the end of the foyer, the Founders Bust, wrapped in a winding mahogany wood staircase with connected by white spindles, adorning the railing. A golden-brown stair runner with brass rods carefully holds the carpet in place, topped by a massive golden chandelier.

Upstairs are eight more light taupe carpeted suites numbered clockwise from the top of the stairs, with warm, wood floors in the hallway.

The rooms are similar, but unique in décor. Each contains a spacious private bathroom with an enormous mirror framed in a thick golden bronze casing; and a walk-in shower with a pull-down seat. A nightstand, lamp, telephone, mirror, a couple pieces of artwork, a dresser resting below, an alarm clock radio with the ability to charge your smart phone, and double trimmed Egyptian cotton sheets, color coded by size, complete the space.

The best view in the house has to be in the upper right corner, room 205. To the right, just above the pergola, there is a perfect view of the Milwaukee VA hospital. At the far end of the room, you can see the Fisher House flag waving in the air, overlooking VA’s historic district, Old Main and iconic Miller Park.

You think to yourself, this could be home.

It has been a long day, you get in the shower, turn the nickel handle and a rush of warm water caresses your skin with just the right amount of pressure. You turn in for the night and wake up refreshed.

Today will be a brighter day; you’ll take the shuttle to see your Veteran, because a family’s love is a good medicine.

From our family to yours, this is your home. Stay as long as you need.

Understanding a need through a life changing experience

BY YANITZ IRIZARRY

She is once again in the hospital, surrounded by scurrying nurses, doctors, staff, beeping machines and a sick child. Desperately waiting for her 3-year-old daughter to get better, she stays at her bedside for yet another night.

She didn’t think she’d be back here, back in this same situation after doctors removed her daughter’s first kidney when she was only 8 months old. But now the tumors were back on the right kidney.

The doctors tell her, no matter what they do, due to a genetic disorder, they’ll keep coming back. They have to take her last, remaining kidney.

Fortunately, for Jennifer Kiefer, she was a perfect match and could share a kidney with her daughter Kennedy.

Three years later, the Milwaukee VA Fisher House manager, has never forgotten those agonizing days and nights in the hospital.

“I’ve been in that same situation,” said Kiefer. “I never left my daughter’s side, being that she was so young in the hospital.”

Now as the Fisher House manager, she will be able to help provide a home away from home for families in similar situations at the Milwaukee VA Medical Center. When the Fisher House officially opens April 23, it will provide 16 private suites for families of Veterans getting care at VA, along with a living room, library, well-stocked kitchen and even toys for children.

“This year has been all about getting things ready for Fisher House,” said Kiefer. “I am excited to open the doors, engage with families and engage with Veterans.”

Kiefer oversees both temporary lodging programs at Milwaukee VA for Veterans and their families who live more than 50 miles away. The Milwaukee VA Fisher House lodging is geared toward supporting families, while the hotel lodging is strictly for Veterans.

“The thing people have to remember is that what is provided to the Veterans (at the hotel) is at no cost to them; it is what the government provides,” she said. “This Milwaukee VA Fisher House is not provided by the government. It was built half by the Fisher House Foundation and half by community raised funds.”

Although the 13,000-square-foot building cost more than $6.2 million, half that was raised before the construction team put one shovel in the ground. Kiefer started at VA in 2007 as a social worker on the Iraq and Afghanistan outreach polytrauma team.

The Fisher House position was an extension of a job she already loved.

“I felt when this position opened up, this was something I could really do. I really liked the job I was in, so I wasn’t too sure if I should go for it,” said Kiefer. “I never regretted it. I’ve loved every minute of it.”

Kiefer knows firsthand just how much of a difference Fisher House could make on a family in distress.

“I know what it is like,” she said. “I stayed a lot of time at Children’s Hospital. I would stay at the hospital two to three nights on a pull-out couch. Sometimes you just want a break to get away from the doctors, the beeping machines.”

Kiefer’s daughter, now 6, is healthy and leading a full life three years after the transplant. But that memory so many years ago is what drives her commitment to Fisher House.

“I feel like doing this job, she said, “is exactly what I was meant to be doing.”

GOOD MEDICINE

通过的 groundbreaking, reached out to him. Peck, who served in the Air Force from 1966 to 1970, is also the commander of the Harley-Davidson American Legion Post and a treasurer for the American Legion Riders. His son, a Marine Corps captain, has been in the military since 2004.

“I had no clue what a Fisher House was, but as soon as he told me, I was absolutely on board,” Peck said. “You know, when we, in the military, deploy, we have a hundred buddies who go with us, who we can commiserate with. But it’s the families left behind who really sacrifice. They have to take care of the expenses, the home, the house and all the other finances, the kids and the stress if their loved one gets hurt. This takes away some of that stress.”

Before the 2014 groundbreaking, it all became more real for Peck when he saw the sign go up announcing the future site of the Fisher House.

“That made it a lot more real,” he said. “The people of Wisconsin are always very supportive of veteran causes and incredibly generous. Everyone is touched by a veteran — be it a spouse, a brother, an aunt or uncle, grandma or brother. Everyone understands this, and they were happy to make this a reality.”

Edamame Dip
Recipe of the Month

Ingredients
- 12-16 oz cooked, unshelled edamame, fresh or frozen
- ½ cup plain low-fat yogurt
- 1 avocado, peeled, pitted, and roughly chopped
- ½ cup water
- ½ cup lime or lemon juice
- 3 dashes hot sauce (or to taste)
- 3 drops sesame/olive oil (or to taste)
- Sea salt, to taste

Directions
1. Place cooked edamame in a food processor. Pulse until smooth.
2. Add cilantro, pulse again.
3. Add remaining ingredients, taste (or to taste)
4. Serve with fresh vegetables, pita chips, etc.

We’re approaching warmer weather which means chilled foods are coming back our tables. And, when you’re not quite ready for a full meal, healthy snack options are every dietician’s dream. Instead of reaching for the same old chip and dip combinations, try adding some pizazz to your everyday snack routine. Salsa and guacamole might be healthy and delicious options, but eating too many chips may ruin your health-conscious endeavors.

For your next snack adventure, try creating your own homemade dip. If you love hummus, an edamame dip is a nice variation to it. Protein-packed edamame, fresh cilantro, and creamy avocado combine to make a dip that will satisfy your hunger cues. Edamame is an immature soybean. About ½ cup of edamame out of the pods provides about 120 calories, 9 grams of fiber, 2.5 grams of fat, and 11 grams of protein. Edamame also contains vitamin C and vitamin A — two key antioxidants.

Add some fresh cilantro, avocado, lime juice, a dash of hot sauce (and a few other ingredients), and you have a fresh, healthy snack at your fingertips. Even better, use freshly cut vegetables to scoop up your edamame dip.

Eating a healthy diet also includes healthy snacking. The next time you run through your local grocery store, instead of picking up a packaged dip or salsa, try making this recipe at home. Your body will thank you for eating well.

Sam Wright
Employee Education

“Sam assumed the position of acting manager, Employee Education department, months ago when there were a number of staffing changes. He has served in that position admirably while also carrying on his duties as a training specialist and TMS administrator. He treats staff with respect and honesty and is certainly forthright when dealing with problems and minor crises. Sam’s contribution helps our mission serving Veterans every day.”

How do you think Fisher House will serve our Veterans?

Ken Franklin, EMS: “I think anything that is here to help Veterans is a good thing. So if it helps the family of the Vet, it is a good thing.”

Veronica Davis, QM&S: “It is a good thing and attracts a variety of Veterans from other areas outside of Milwaukee. It is great for the facility and state; people can see what VA has to offer.”

Matt Behrend, FM: “It’ll give Vets and their families peace of mind; one less thing to worry about. So, it’s a great thing for our campus.”

Patty Davis, DAV: “The spouse of a Veteran traveled here and she had a stroke while he received care for two months and paid two months of lodging. Fisher House will help family members like her.”

Ciana Wedgeworth, CLC: “I think it’s a good thing. When your loved one is in the hospital, you worry about where you are going to stay, or how much it will cost. They can be near their loved one.”
